On a roll: EPA proposes to ban or restrict two highly toxic paint stripping chemicals

By LINDSAY MCCORMICK | Published: JANUARY 13, 2017

Lindsay McCormick is a Project Manager.

Yesterday, EPA proposed a rule to ban methylene chloride and either ban or restrict the use of N-methylpyrrolidone in paint stripping products, subject to certain national security exemptions. This proposal is the third such proposed action by the agency in the past month (see here and here). Below, find a short description of these chemicals and EPA's proposed actions.
